

"The Steven M Roser Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery Society was founded in 2005. A group of Columbia University College of Dental Medicine pre-doctoral students felt a need to enhance their knowledge and understanding of oral and maxillofacial surgery and share their enthusiasm with others. This society was founded to promote interest in the specialty and challenge the members to strive to become qualified and highly motivated future OMFS candidates.

In honor of his passion and contribution to the specialty, the society is named after the longest serving and founder of the prestigious Oral and Maxillofacial Surgery program here at Columbia University."
